WM. YOUNG MAKES STATEMENT

Says the Death of His Son was Due to Falling on Open Blade

While William Young, the man who stabbed his son, James, last Monday evening retained the strictest silence ever since his arrest. A full and complete interview with the prisoner as he sat in his cell in the county jail was had.

Crying between remarks, Young told of the terrible tragedy and impressed upon the reporter that he was innocent of wrong intentions; that he never meant to kill his son; that the young man merely fell on the open knife; that he seldom had quarrels with his wife; that he loved his son and he was the flower of his life; that he does not now care what happens to him, whether he has any defense or not.

It was a most remarkable interview with the man who will shortly be brought up for trial for murder of his son, in one of the most repulsive crimes that the county has seen in years, for, as everybody says: "It is bad enough to kill a stranger, but when one kills his own son it is pretty fierce."

He was asked to explain certain matters in connection with the tragedy and at first said he had nothing to say, that it was too terrible to talk about. He was asked if there had been anything in the papers about the affair, saying that he had looked thru the paper he held in his hand. It was then called to his attention that it was Monday's paper.

Here is what Young said in substance in reply to questions:

"I and my wife had been to town in the afternoon and returned home shortly before five o'clock. I was standing in the kitchen and she had a milk pan in her hand. She had lately been complaining about the heavy work on the farm and we got to arguing matters. Finally we got rather heated and I tossed a coconut in my hand at her and struck the milk pan, I thought the noise would make her think I was angry and would help make her keep still. I told her to stop her chewing and then I walked away from her.

"My little nine year old girl then rushed to the barn and called my son, James, and he came to the house. At that time I was standing outside the kitchen, just off the stoop. He came up to me and asked me what I was doing. I said 'nothing' but he replied that I was striking his mother and that I must stop it. I stepped upon the porch, about 14 inches high. I stood there and he insisted that I had again been striking his mother. I said I had not but he made a pass at me and tried to strike me but he failed to reach me.

"I held the open knife in my hand and as he made the pass, he apparently fell over a stick and fell on the porch on his side.

I guess he must have fallen on the blade but he got up and made a rush to the wood pile, apparently to get a stick of wood. I knew that he had struck the knife but I felt that it merely hit his hand. I never for a moment realized that it struck his body as it did.

"I did not wait to see what happened, but walked into the house and into my bedroom where I got my revolver and started off to a neighbor's. I intended to go there and remain until my son's fit of anger abated."

"Did you have any words with your wife at the time?" was asked.

"Not a word. I merely walked out of the house," was the reply.

"She claims that, as you passed her, you told her to get out of the way or you would kill her."

"I never said that at all, I merely pushed her to one side and walked away. I did not make a threat."

"I went to the neighbor's and remained there until the officers came after me. I did not know that my son was dead when they came, I merely thought they were arresting me for the trouble. They never told me he was dead and I did not know it until morning. God knows I was surprised and grieved beyond expression."

Asked as to why he took the revolver when he left the house, Young said that he thought his son was coming after him with a stick of wood.

"I intended to show him the gun and tell him that I would use it if he made an attack upon me but I never intended to shoot him, not for a minute. I had to protect myself because, on various occasions, he had told me that he would 'fix' me. I therefore feared he might try to harm me. I am all crippled up from rheumatism and I was in no condition to stand up against him if he made an attack. No, I did not intend to shoot him."

"James had a quick temper and I knew it, but I never expected this turn of affairs for he was the flower of my life. For a few years I had been unable, through rheumatism, to do anything on the farm and he had looked after the place for me. I was delighted to think that I had a son who could do it and he was the pride of my life. I used to help him in the chores as much as I could but he ran the farm and I was glad to have him. He was one of the best boys in the county and now he is dead I don't know what I shall do."

Asked if he had retained counsel he said: "I haven't done so and I don't know I shall. I don't seem to care what becomes of me now for it is a terrible thing and I can't understand it."

Asked as to his trouble with his wife, Young said he had not quarreled with her much, that they had spats but that was all. He said he had always provided well for his family, had always managed to send his son to school and tried, because he was his only son, to do all he could for him.

He said his wife had lately become dissatisfied with the work on the farm, believing they had to much milk to handle, etc. Their farm is 190 acres and Young says he owns it and hard work paid for it. He says he was practically retired and looked to the son to support him the remainder of his life.

"Now he is gone, I don't care what happens to me, I never meant to harm him," was his remark every few moments.

As the tragedy took place in the rear of the yard and outside of view of the wife, the only person who saw the affair and saw it dimly at that was the hired man. He told how he stood in the barn door as the son went to the house and he saw him go up to his father. They stood there a minute and then he says the father throw the coconut at the son's head. Then something happened but he could not tell what it was as the boy stood between him and the father.

He explained, however, that, as he walked away toward the orchard after the father had gone inside, the son held his hand over his heart and he was all doubled up as he walked away.

The hired man couldn't tell whether the father had stabbed him as they were talking or not.

The little girl told of the trouble between the mother and the father but added that the latter did not strike her mother so far as she saw.

By a strange coincidence of facts, it develops that through the murder of his son, James, William Young has come into line for one-fourth claim to the farm which his own father had not seen fit to will to him directly. In other words, because he killed his son by stabbing him, the man now confined in the county jail is one of his heirs and will have a fourth interest in a valuable farm.

It seems that the senior Young's father, (grandfather of the victim), left the farm to his grandson James, making a provision that his own son, (the man charged with murder), should have a life interest in the place, that he should run it during his life after which it was to go to the grandson outright.

Now, through the tragedy in which the senior Young killed his own child, the property became a part of the estate of the son James. As his father, the accused murderer becomes one of four heirs to the son's property which represents considerable besides the farm. The other heirs are his mother and two sisters, making in all four claimants to the farm and money, which will be thrown into court as a result of the terrible tragedy. In other words, part of the victim's own money will likely be used by the father in defending his neck.

Saturday afternoon Judd Van Deusen, a brother-in-law of Young, went to Waukegan for the express purpose of calling on the man charged with the murder of his son, and the relative went to the county jail where he spent considerable time talking to the unfortunate man. The purpose of the visit, was to see what Young wanted done with his property. The relatives talked matters over and the belief was that the proper course would be to have the courts name a man who would act as a sort of receiver.

Young agreed to the suggestion and they finally agreed to have W. Westlake, of Antioch, take charge of the Young affairs and look after them until formal action can be taken. Likely Westlake will be selected by the court in case he is willing.

Young received his relative in a very cordial manner, acting perfectly cool and calm and talking about matters as if nothing had happened only what was right. He maintained to them that he was innocent of any intentional wrong, explaining that it was all accidental.

FIRE AT BLUFF LAKE

The New Residence of the Ayling Bros. Burned to the Ground

At 11:30 o'clock Tuesday evening the beautiful new family residence being built by the Ayling Bros. of Chicago, situated on the north shore of Bluff Lake was burned to the ground.

Carpenters, plumbers and painters were about to complete their work this week and the house was being furnished, although the entire outfitting had not yet arrived.

Had there been any wind the entire surrounding buildings would have been consumed also, but they were badly scorched.

The house was a modern one, being fitted with gas, steam heat, water works and every convenience necessary for the comfort of the occupants, and was intended to be used by the family the year round.

The cost of the building was $10,000 with an insurance of $5,000.

The carpenters, plumbers and painters lost their tools which were in the burned building. The cause of the fire is unknown.

GOVERNMENT SEIZES PACKAGE OF CIGARS

The United States government has seized a parcel addressed to Rudd Hermann of Kenosha, on the grounds that it contained goods suitable to duty, which were being transported through the United States mails without the little formality of paying the duty on them. Some of the friends of the Kenosha man, residing in Germany decided to send him some cigars, and the cigars, two hundred in number, had been carefully wrapped in other merchandise. The whole was sent by parcel post to Hermann at Kenosha. Before he tastes of the delights of cigars from the fatherland he will be forced to settle with his "Uncle Sam" to the tune of $10.54. Hermann was probably entirely innocent of any wrong doing, but he will be forced to foot the bill and the present will be a costly one for him.

The parcel containing the smuggled cigars was of a very ordinary appearance, but as it came from a foreign country the postal officials stopped it when it arrived in New York and proceeded to open it. In the parcel was found a small quantity of merchandise while in the center were the cigars. Notwithstanding the fact that there were 200 of the cigars the government agent valued them at only $1.50, and under the law the duty on them will amount to 60 cents. The government, however, did not overlook the violation of the law and a fine of $9.94 was tacked on just to show that when cigars are brought in from Germany they must be paid for.

Hermann has not as yet called at the post-office to claim his parcel and it is possible that he will be willing to allow the postmaster to smoke the cigars in lieu of paying the fine and duty on the parcel.

This is the first time anything has been seized in the Kenosha office for non-payment of duty, and the law is not exactly clear to the officials. It would seem unreasonable for the fine to be collectable against the Kenosha man as he was in no way connected with the sending of the parcel, but he will have to pay the fine and run the risk of getting a rebate from the man who sent the parcel. Foreigners in the city receive many parcels from their native countries, but it is seldom that one is held up by the department at Washington.

The people should advise their friends that the laws governing the sending of merchandise through the mails provide for the collection of the same duty as if the goods were imported by steamer.

Mohammedans.

A conservative estimate of the Mohammedan population of the world was given as 200,000,000 by Dr. Zwermer, of Arabia. The koran can be read by one-fourth of that number, while the Bible has been translated into over; language spoken by the followers of the false prophet.

BARN BURNED AT GILMER

Everything Except House Destroyed by Fire Boy Narrowly Escapes.

At four o'clock Saturday afternoon workmen on the Ernest Pott's farm, south of Gilmer, were surprised to see flames shooting skyward from the strawstack at the rear of the barn where they were at work. There was a heavy wind and immediately the flames caught the woodwork of the barn.

Despite efforts of the men and neighbors it seemed an incredibly short time before all the buildings on the farm were aflame.

The cattle were in the barn at the outbreak of the conflagration and Ernest Potts, Jr., son of the owner of the place, rushed into the barn and succeeded in releasing all but three of them but barely escaped with his life in doing so. Three of the cattle were burned and Potts was badly injured by the falling of the upper floor of the barn that he had to be carried from the building and the attendance of a physician was found necessary.

Everything on the place with the exception of the dwelling house was burned. Barns, granaries, hen house and all the out-buildings were consumed within the space of an hour and a half. The smoke and the flames could be seen for miles and caused considerable speculation in the little village of Diamond Lake, Rockefeller and Ivanhoe as well as Gilmer.

The loss is partially covered by insurance in the Eia company, but the loss it is understood will be quite heavy.

CORONER TAYLOR NOT TO INTERFERE

Will Not Take Any Action in Zion City Woman's Death.

It was expected that Coroner Taylor of Lake County would take a hand in Zion's affairs and investigate the manner of death of Mrs. Ruth Cantal, wife of Overseer Harry E. Cantel, who died early Saturday morning without medical attention. She was surrounded for several hours by overseers and elders, who prayed for her safe delivery from the crisis of childbirth, but advise from visitors in the city that a physician should be called was ignored.

Coroner Taylor stated he would not interfere with the regular burial proceedings unless action were requested by Overseer John G. Speicher, health commissioner for Zion. The latter declared that, as a certified physician, he would issue a regular burial permit, and that the funeral, in consideration of Zion's rule against Sunday death rites, will be performed either on Saturday afternoon or on Monday.

Overseer Cantel was formerly in charge of the church work in Great Britain, and came with his wife to Zion City last February. He made his home in Elijah hospice.

BIG FACTORY FIRE AT NORTH CHICAGO

That the plants of the Chicago Hardware Foundry Co. and the Chicago Hardware company, together with a number of dwellings situated just west of those places, were not wiped out by the fire at the Raven Mining Co.'s plant at North Chicago Saturday afternoon was due to the fact that the wind remained in a strictly westerly direction. Had it veered even for a few minutes, the two largest factories in the village would have been destroyed no matter how hard efforts were expended to save them.

As it was, the plant of the Raven Mining Co., was burned to the ground and all its contents were destroyed. While the loss is complete, the villagers are congratulating themselves that the blaze did not result any more disastrously than it did. For a long time the whole factory district and residence portion of many of the employees was in danger which caused occupants to be all ready to make for a safer resting place.

Never before hereabouts have the firemen worked under such adverse conditions so far as smoke and gas was concerned. The contents of the plant destroyed, a rubber substance, had the result of sending up the most dense smoke imaginable and all that could be done was to throw water on the west side entirely. The volume of smoke arising and blown east was such that a person could not have lived a moment within almost a hundred yards of it. Therefore, if the wind had shifted to the east, the firemen would have found it utterly impossible to remain near the other and fight the flames as the smoke would have driven them away.

The wind blew a gale all during the fire, being one of the strongest winds of the season.

The exact origin of the fire will likely never be known. It is believed it was caused by a spark flying from the Cupola to a tank of oil about 40 ft. from the building. The latter place is where the first blaze was discovered, and had there been sufficient water, it believed it could have been put out. The fire was discovered at 8:30 o'clock.

DOWIE HOOTED IN TABERNACLE

First Blood is Shed in Bitter Controversy in Shiloh Tabernacle

John Alexander Dowie practically ended his career Sunday amidst the same sort of turbulence and rioting that attended his advent in Chicago thirteen years ago.

Torn clothes, bloody faces, the hoodlums and cat-calls and jeers of a hoodlum audience that had gathered to look upon a "curiosity" were incidents of what was in all likelihood his final public appearance as they were of his Michigan avenue tabernacle gatherings of the days when he was hooted in the streets by gangs of gamins and vagrants.

"The First Apostol" tried to hold a meeting late in the afternoon in the tabernacle he had built in Zion City. He tried to win back with mingled threats and promises the allegiance of his rebellious followers. He tried to tongue-lash and confound his enemies, as he did in the days when he was at the height of his power.

But he failed in all things and left the building borne up in the arms of two burly negroes, a tottering, feeble old man, whose life was run and whose power had passed.

The few who remained loyal to the "First Apostol" realized the sad estate into which their leader had fallen and from Sunday's fiasco they learned that it is past all hope of being amended. For while Dowie was leaving the tabernacle to a chorus of jeers and the noisy shuffling of the irreverent feet of a horde of boys, Voliva was holding a big and orderly meeting at the college building. Consequently the darkest gloom has fallen upon the faithful few.

The riot was not serious in the matter of bloodshed. A dozen faces were scratched, a score of coats were torn and Policeman McCormick had the luck of the peacemaker—he got the worst of it. While the trouble was in progress some thirty or more blows were struck.

There were 600 in the audience. A hundred of them were his own adherents; perhaps many more were Zionites who have espoused the cause of Voliva and the remainder were boys and the curious from Waukegan and other nearby places.

Dowie appeared at the early morning service and spoke to a mere handful. He had husbanded his feeble powers for the afternoon gathering. His son Gladstone accompanied him and sat in his gorgeously embroidered garments that he put on for the first time two Sundays ago.

"Glad rags," the hoodlums of the audience named them aloud when they caught sight of him, and they cheered sarcastically. Sitting in his big arm-chair, Dowie said: "I find the death rate is rapidly increasing, which shows that the prayers of those rebellious, self-chosen overseers are not being heeded."

"Don't forget," he went on, "that the Christian Catholic Apostolic church is under my banner. Remember that the apostolic church under those rebels does not exist. They were removed as soon as they rebelled against me. They are thieves and robbers!"

"On shut up! You took all the money!" "Never! Never! Liar!" The audience jeered back at him, and Dowie sank in his chair weak and trembling.

"Pay your debts," clamored the crowd; "Give back the money I sank in your Mexican scheme," they shouted.

"John Alexander Dowie always pays his debts," Dowie answered and there were more cries of "Liar!"

That was where the riot began. Someone grabbed Gould, the white-haired leader of the disturbers. B. F. Morris, Dowie's colonel of the Zion Guards, jerked the old man from his seat, and a dozen interlofer, Gladstone Dowie took a hand and everyone rushed to that part of the tabernacle. Women screamed, men shouted and boys mounted benches and howled and whistled. On the platform, Arrington was beseeching the crowd to be orderly, but the crowd refused until Policeman McCormick got into the thick of the melee and pried the combatants apart. After ten minutes, order was restored and Dowie proceeded.

"I am here to answer every charge against me," he said. "While John Alexander Dowie ruled in Zion there was peace and plenty there; a square meal was never lacking."

"Not in Shiloh House," cried an urchin. "John Alexander Dowie loves Zion," he said. "In proof of that he has by will left to it in perpetuity 97 per cent. of all he has. Guess that's pretty good, isn't it?"

The audience laughed. "There will be more deaths in Zion if this rebellion is continued," his anger rising again, but the crowd jeered so that he gave up and the meeting broke up in a tumult.

There was an attempt to hold the customary after meeting, but though the policemen cleared the tabernacle of all but Dowie's own followers the crowd stampeded back and the effort ended in disorder.

HERMAN SCHENK SEVERELY INJURED

Struck by Fast Train and Hurled About Thirty Feet in the Air.

Herman Schenk, who was engaged in the mason contracting business in Barrington for years, and afterwards removed to Palatine and engaged in the same business, was struck by the North Western fast mail train Friday morning at a Palatine crossing.

The accident occurred shortly before seven o'clock, before the crossing gateman had commenced work. Mr. Schenk had just started to cross, not noticing the approaching train, and the horse was fairly on the track when the engine struck squarely.

The impact was so severe that Mr. Schenk was hurled thirty or forty feet into the air, striking the ground on his head. He received a severe cut on his head and it is thought that he may have received severe internal injuries.

The injured man was given treatment immediately by Dr. Schierding.

The horse was ground into pulp under the wheels of the train, and the wagon was smashed.

ZIONITES SEEK NEW LOCATIONS

Confidence in Leaders Seems on the Wane Large Numbers Leaving Daily

A general exodus is in progress from Zion City.

People are leaving by scores and hundreds in vans, wagons, buggies, on trains, and any other way to get out.

Hundreds are leaving daily, packing their goods, such as are left, and going away to other near-by and far-away towns to get work by which to keep from starving to death.

The people seem to have lost confidence in both Voliva and Dowie, and while hundreds will stick to the banner of the white dove, whichever side wins, it is prophesied by one of the farmers on the limits of the town, that within three weeks there will not be two thousand people in Zion City.

Two-thirds of the hay and grain in Germany is still harvested by hand.

TROUT LINE ILLEGAL

Attorney General Stead's Says Trout Lines are Prohibited.

Fishermen will do well to take notice of the opinion just recently handed down by Attorney General W. H. Stead, at Springfield in regard to a question in the fish and game law. According to the attorney's opinion it is against the law to use a trout line for fishing during the spawning season, which is from April 15 to June 1.

His definition of a trout line simply consists of one long line, with numerous short-ones attached at intervals. A large number of anglers in this section usually take a trout or what is usually called a throw line with numerous hooks on it and in a boat drop the same through the center of the stream, the upper end of the line being anchored with a heavy weight while the lower end of the usual 200-foot line is tied to a plank. Every little while the fisherman picks up the line commencing at the plank taking off the fish and rebaiting as they proceed up the line.

Many fishermen believe that the exception of hook and line permits the use of the trout line. Mr. Stead, however declared that hook and line must be taken in the singular sense only and that the trout line comes under the head of the section of the law which reads, "Devices other than hook and line." Only the pole and line of the amateur is permissible during the closed season.

Glass from Vesuvius Lava.

It is being pointed out for the consolation of the people about Vesuvius that lava, like adversity, has its uses. It makes, for instance, a very beautiful glass of extraordinary lightness. But curiously every volcano sends out a special brand of lava with qualities of its own, which can only be discovered by experience. The rich plains of Sicily owe much of their fertility to decomposed lava, and in South America volcanic soil is found to be the best in the world for coffee growing, though nervous planters would rather take the soil without the volcano.

And Candidate for Presidency of Woman's Club Lost a Vote—Member Criticizes Her Sisters Freely.

"Yes, women are queer," said the domestic woman lately become a club member, "and nowhere do they show it more than in their clubs. I ought to be ashamed to talk about my sex this way, especially to a man, but honesty and frankness are my particular virtues and since you brought up the subject I don't mind telling you what I really and truly think. Of course, you won't tell this, but it's my private opinion that women's clubs, and especially the one I belong to, are organized for the simple purpose of providing one day in every two weeks when women may strut around and show their feathers like a peacock. Such gowns and such hats you never saw, and such gabbling you never heard. And the funny part of it is there is no more culture about their gabble than there was years before they joined the club. Neither has the club atmosphere and the privilege of listening to Elbert Hubbard and Ben Greet emancipated them from that peculiar mental bias that women will always have, no matter how clubby they may get. Now, for instance, the subject of electing a new president was lately up in our club. The two prime requisites for the presidency of our club are 'money' and 'dignity.' One candidate was objected to because of her gown. She was a stout woman and she was short-sighted enough to have the gown made princess of a material with stripes running round and round. This, of course, made her lack 'dignity.' The other candidate had both money and dignity and seemed in every way desirable and I announced my intention of voting for her.

"Oh, don't vote for her," exclaimed a little butterfly of a woman with lots of frills and furbelows. "Why?" I asked. "Oh—why—well, she hippity hops. That's why I say women are women, whether they're club women or domestic animals."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

GETS ALL THE SUNLIGHT.

Peculiar Arrangement of the Telegraph Plant of India—Leaves Rarely Still.

The telegraph plant of India has a method all its own for catching the sunshine. Each of its leaves is composed of three leaflets. The larger terminal one erects itself during the day and turns sharply down at night, while the other two smaller leaflets move constantly, day and night, describing complete circles with a peculiar jerking motion like the second hand of a watch. Occasionally they rest for a period and then go on again, thus bringing every part of every leaf to the full action of the sunlight.—Telegraph Age.

WORK OF BURMESE WOMEN

Engage in Large Financial Deals That They May Support Husbands in Idleness.

The Burmese woman's highest ambition is to maintain her husband in lordly idleness and to supply him with abundant funds for cock fighting, bullock cart racing and gambling. Many of the Burmese women do big deals in timber, buying up in advance the paddy crops of a whole district, and so on, on a scale that requires big financing.

RETURN TO IDOL WORSHIP.

Russian Tribes Take Peculiar Advantage of Recent Edict Issued by the Czar.

Four villages of Ushum circuit in Russia have informed the government that in accordance with the czar's edict, guaranteeing freedom of worship, they returned to their old religion, the worship of the idols. These people call themselves Tschere misses and belong to an ancient Finnish tribe. Their chief idol is a curious rock "sacred to the god Chum balat." It is situated near a public road, and the travelers in the post chaise can witness the worship paid to this ancient god by slaughtering chickens and small game at the foot of the holy rock, allowing the earth to drink the blood.

Chumbalat the heathens esteem the chief of their many gods; he is said to be able to send one suffering, sickness and even death. The name means "Old Man on the Mountain." The god is supposed to reside under the great rock. "If the tribe should ever be in danger, Chumbalat will rise from beneath the rock and defend us," say the people. "He wears golden armor and rides a mighty war horse."

Nicholas is distressed that his edict should have resulted in the revival of heathenism, but cannot forbid idolatry under the terms of the published ukase.

ARE AT HOME IN WATER.

Nature Has So Equipped the Caribou That Swimming Is No Task for Him.

Clad with a coat of oily wool next his skin, the caribou is covered exteriorly with a dense pelage of fine quills.

Every caribou, indeed, wears a cork jacket, and when this is prime the creature seems on the water rather than in the water. No other quadruped that know swims as high as the caribou. Their speed afloat is so great that it takes the best of canoe men to overtake a vigorous buck. A good paddler is supposed to cover about six miles an hour, so the caribou probably goes five. There are many kinds of woodland and rough country over which the caribou cannot travel so fast as this.

What wonder, then, that they are so ready to take to the water as soon as they find it in their course. Mr. Munro assured me that several times he saw caribou swim a broad bay that was in their line, though a trifling deflection would have given them easy walking along the shore to the same point, and with but little increase of distance.

LIVE DUCKS FOR DECOYS.

Arkansas Hunter Has Evolved Scheme Which Brings the Best of Results.

J. F. Berger, of Anthony, who is an enthusiastic duck shooter, has secured two pairs of domesticated mallard ducks for decoys. The ducks are taken to the hunting grounds in small covered baskets. To keep them from flying when in use a light leather strap with a buckled noose attached to a long shore cord is placed about their necks and a weight or anchor tied to one foot.

This, however, does not diminish their ability to swim, and when placed in the water they go to the limit of their shore cord. For results they make the old-fashioned wooden decoys look like 30 cents.—Arkansas City Traveler.

Doctors Said He Would Not Live.

Peter Frey, of Woodruff, Pa., writes: "After doctoring for two years with the best physicians in Waynesburg, and still getting worse, the doctors advised me if I had any business to attend to I had better attend to it at once, as I could not possibly live another month, as there was no cure for me. Foley's Kidney Cure was recommended to me by a friend, and I immediately sent my son to the store for it and after taking three bottles I began to get better and continued to improve until I was entirely well."

Two Sizes, 50c and $1.00.

HE WAS A MASTER

THAT IS, IN HIS OWN PARTICULAR LINE.

Freeman Griggs, A. M., Proved Right to Title He Had Conferred Upon Himself—Had Henshaw at Disadvantage.

Henshaw is one of those men who, if not exactly dishonest, certainly justly wins the reputation of being "slow pay." He hates to pay a bill—especially a small bill; it's like pulling teeth to extract money from his purse, and he therefore has a well-defined suspicion that every unknown visitor to his office is a dun. He has hedged himself about with more guards and has made himself more difficult of approach than J. Pierpont Morgan. He always sends out from to see if the way is clear before he ventures out of his office to go home, and when close pressed has a private egress into a back hall and so escapes by the rear stairway and the freight door of the building.

"I AM FREEMAN GRIGGS, A. M.—AFTER MONEY."

The other day the boy brought in a card which he read with suspicion. "Freeman Griggs, A. M.," he repeated. "Do I know the man, boy?"

"I don't think so," replied the buffer. "I never remember of seeing him before."

"Hem! Freeman Griggs, A. M.," repeated Henshaw. "'Master of Arts,' College man. Look like a professor, boy?"

"Well, he's got eyeglasses on," admitted the doubtful youngster.

Now, if Henshaw has a weakness at all, it is for education, culture and the long-haired cult. He has written and published a pamphlet himself on something that nobody else is interested in, and therefore feels himself equal to fraternizing with men whose names carry any weight of abbreviations after them.

"Send him in," said Henshaw.

In bustled a wide-awake looking young man. He had removed his eyeglasses before he got to the door, and he bore down on Henshaw, drawing a billcase from his pocket as though prepared to "hold him up" at the point of it.

"I'm collector for Campbell & Gore. Here's a little bill against you. My clients want their money," he said, slapping the document down upon Henshaw's desk.

Henshaw bristled and stared from the card to his visitor. "Who let you in here?" he demanded.

"Why, the boy. Just sent in my card, you know. You've got it in your hand, there."

"Huh! This your card?" grunted the disgusted Henshaw. "Freeman Griggs, A. M.?"

"That's me, Freeman Griggs."

"I'd like to know where you took your degree, young man," said Henshaw, with scorn.

"Degree? Oh, you mean those letters? Rather a bright idea, don't you think? My own. I'm Freeman Griggs, A. M.—after money. And I'm after money now; do I get it?"

He got it.

OWL AND MINK IN FIGHT.

Bird Had Seized Prey, But Found Itself Unable to Carry It Off.

While hauling wood on the Mattawakeung river A. W. Rollins, of Wytopick, discovered a moving object a short distance from the road, and leaving his team he hastened to ascertain what it was when, to his surprise, he found it to be a large owl in combat with a good sized mink, says a Lewiston (Me.) dispatch.

After a struggle of several moments the owl attempted to rise with its prey, but was able to ascend only a few feet when the mink fell to the ground, where it was soon killed by several well-directed blows from Rollins' whip.

Sour Stomach

No appetite, loss of strength, nervousness, headache, constipation, bad breath, general debility, sour risings, and catarrh of the stomach are all due to indigestion. Kodol cures indigestion. This new discovery represents the natural juices of digestion as they exist in a healthy stomach, combined with the greatest known tonic and reconstructive properties. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure does not only cure indigestion and dyspepsia, but this famous remedy cures all stomach troubles by cleansing, purifying, sweetening and strengthening the mucous membranes lining the stomach.

Mr. S. S. Ball, of Ravenswood, W. Va., says: "I was troubled with sour stomach for twenty years. Kodol cured me and we are now using it in milk for baby."

War on Soap.
Scientific medical authorities are waging a war on soap; that is, soap in a form commonly used. The cakes of toilet soap for promiscuous use have already been driven from nearly all the hotels and office buildings in New York. Some startling discoveries were made recently in tests of soap taken from a number of New York hotels. Filth and disease bacteria were found in nearly every sample. The soap from the first-class hotels was no better than that found in cheaper hostleries.

EDITORIAL NOTES.
Father Capon's persistent refusal to remain dead must be a source of considerable income to the cable companies.

The only thing that seems certain about the Czar's new cabinet is that it will not have vowels enough in its name to spell Smith.

The prospect of a war between Columbia and Venezuela loses much of its interest so long as President Castro will not be there to get killed.

Senator La Follette is having his rate bill speech printed for private circulation, a derrick and three stalwart laborers to accompany each volume.

The season now approaches when the hospitable farmer is too busy taking the money off his city guest to care what the comic supplements say about him.

If the Czar had been real crafty, he would have taken that ambassadorship in Paris himself and left Witte at home to wrestle with the Russian Congress.

Anxious Reader: No, denatured alcohol is not a beverage. But the Standard Oil Company is afraid it would disagree with it whether it was drunk or not.

San Francisco conditions are very fast improving to the point where the relief authorities are getting criticised for the way they are distributing the funds.

It is stated that the Standard Oil Company has established a Bureau of Publicity. There is no truth however in the report that it has engaged Mr. Garfield to run it.

Count Boni de Castellane has been returned to the Chamber of Deputies. But his worst enemies are not intimating this time that he bought his way in with his wife's money.

Speaker Cannon celebrated his seventieth birthday this week and remarked incidentally that if anything would reconcile him to having another Democrat in Congress it would be to have Dr. Oiler take a seat on the left side of the House.

Naturally the President meant just what he said when he pitched into the Man with the Muck Rake. But few of his public utterances have been more distorted and misunderstood. What the President was inveighing against was sensationalism, the baseless sensationalism that has happily almost run its course in the yellow and would-be yellow journals of the country. This country has been undergoing a great wave of moral awakening and reform. In some quarters, and from purely sordid motives, the reform has verged on moral hysteria. It was this that the President was striking at. He did not mean that the exposure of corruption wherever it exists was Muckraking. He knows, few better, that there are moral plague spots all over this country and that they have to be raked. He knows too that they are as offensive to men who have to do the raking as to the public that sees them uncovered. But work of this sort is clean in the doing though it may be foul in the corruption it exposes. However, corruption that is not exposed is never eradicated and the more honor is due to the sane and sober writers, prosecuting attorneys and other investigators who have taken a hand in the cleaning up of the political moral nastiness. The very agents of the President have had in what has recently come to be called "Muckraking". The report of Commissioner Garfield, on the corruption of the Standard Oil Company was Muckraking of a sort, but it was a sort for which the President highly commended him. The Interstate Commerce Commission is just now engaged on a job of the same sort. It is uncovering all sorts of corruption, collusion and law breaking in the coal carrying business. It has only just touched on the soft coal carrying roads and probably will find things equally bad when it comes to the hard coal and the oil roads. But nobody is going to accuse Chairman Knapp of being a Muckraker for all he may discover. The same is true of Gov. Folk and District Attorney Jerome and a lot of other good solid men of both parties all over the country who are making a business of digging up corruption and seeing that it is disposed of in an effective and sanitary way. No one need run away with the idea that the President was hitting at such men as these when he talked of Muckraking. They are men of his own sort and he is the sort to uphold them in their work. Sooner or later, it is to be hoped, the need for such exposures will have ceased. But in the meantime there is still need for the Muckraker's sane and judiciously applied and it is only to be hoped that so long as the need exists there will be men found to ply the lowly instrument fearlessly.

Sooner the Better.
A good many people still insist that it is never too late to mend your ways, but you should also bear in mind the fact that it is never too early to do that also.—Austin (Tex.) Statesman.

Cold from Electricity.
The direct production of cold from electricity is a problem that electrical engineers are considering. Something may be done by connecting a motor to an air compressor and expanding the compressed air into a cold storage chamber, but this is costly and cumbersome. We may expect the electro-chemist to refrigerate by energy from the electric supply mains through some such direct method as a reversed battery abstracting heat from the air.

Some of the agricultural papers are publishing the news that this is the year for seventeen year locusts to appear. The territory to be visited by the pests is wide, and includes Illinois. Last year was supposed to be the year for locusts, as many of them were seen, but the government's official bulletin notifies the public to prepare for the invasion in 1908.

On Monday evening Mike Omaley, a young man living east of Wilmet, met with quite a serious accident while working at a switch engine in the gravel pit. It seems that in some way a steam hose connected with the engine became loose and in flying back struck him across the face with terrific force, breaking his nose and bruising his face quite badly. He was at once brought to this place on the engine, where his wound was dressed by Dr. Warner.

ANOTHER SCANDAL

Waukegan Man Arrested For Sending Obscene Literature

GOVERNMENT LAID TRAP

Elmer De Vol, a prominent citizen of Waukegan, waived examination before Federal Commissioner C. A. Buell last week and was bound over to the grand jury on a charge of violation of the postal laws. The arrest came as a denouement to the scandal that resulted in Rev. Justine Goodone Wade's being sent to an insane asylum. It stirred Waukegan as no other recent event has ever done, with the exception of the arrest of the minister on a heinous charge and his subsequent sensational effort to commit suicide by plunging before a Chicago & Northwestern passenger train.

De Vol is a leading member of the First Congregational church of which Wade was pastor. He is a man of means and an official of an abstract company, and has a beautiful home in Ash street, Waukegan. This home was thrown open to the accused clergyman after the latter's exposure as the author of obscene matter sent through the mails. De Vol was a leader among those who rallied to the support of the clergyman, and who refused to accept as true the charges made against him by the postal authorities.

Coming in the wake of the tragic climax of Rev. Wade's life, when he was consigned to a madhouse through the leniency of the government in dropping the criminal charges against him, the arrest of the staid, solid citizen, De Vol, created a profound sensation. All Waukegan is wondering where the federal investigation will end.

Comment hinges on the rumor that the government has unearthed a publishing house secretly conducted in Waukegan for the purpose of disseminating forbidden matter and that the incarcerated minister was at the head of it. Others are said to have been identified with the institution, which was known as the Hygiene and Tokology company.

A small but complete printing press has been seized by the federal authorities, together with all the paraphernalia and records of the institution. The authorities refuse to talk of the case or make public any of the facts in their possession.

De Vol's arrest took place at his business office. Postoffice Inspector McAfee made the arrest and quietly took the prisoner to Chicago, where he was turned over to the authorities. He waived examination and was held to the federal grand jury under bond of $1,000.

In connection with his arrest it develops that the government worked quite a clever little coup on him to get hold of the literature the government claims is prohibited from the mails.

According to a report, the government secret agents went to a mail order house in Indiana, and worked through them, managed to get them to place an order for circulars with De Vol which would be sent directly to the government agents.

Innocent of the personality of his customers, De Vol, of course sent the circulars as ordered and the result was that they procured the papers which they now charge were prohibited from mails.

After making the statement in the local press, De Vol refused to discuss his case whatever. He said he wanted to have one say and that was the end of his discussion.

He, however, denied the statement made by his friends that he had been expecting action on the part of the federal authorities. One man said that, some time ago De Vol made the remark: "Well, they'll (meaning the government) get me yet if I don't look out." He denied having made such a statement at any time.

De Vol denies the statement that the government had seized his printing press, stock of circulars, etc.

JOHN ENGMAN, ANTIOCH

One Man's Evil

By EFFIE ROWLAND

Sometimes Gerald Tenby wondered if his uncle doubted him—if Sir Maurice shared with Antonio the suspicion that he had not been altogether blameless in the matter of Hubert's dishonor; but this thought only came at odd moments. As a general rule, he had too much faith in his uncle's faith in himself. Heir as he was to the Mill Cross property, had the old man at Mill Cross Court really imagined him capable of falling as Hubert had fallen, he never would have stretched out his hand and given his nephew welcome.

There was only one living creature who had dared to tell him to his face that the young man who had gone from his home an outcast had been sacrificed through him and by him. That person was Antonio Marchmont, the girl whom Gerald Tenby had loved ever since he had grown to manhood. And now Antonio was coming to London—coming into the house of the one woman whom he might call an intimate friend.

What would be the outcome of this? Had he been a stranger he might have laughed at the possibility of a girl doing him any harm; but Gerald Tenby never laughed when he thought of Antonio. Indeed, there were moments when he had a feeling of cold fear upon him, when his quick brain carried him into the future, and showed him a probable working out of vengeance—a time of unutterable confusion for himself, and triumph for the man who had been driven from his father's home as a thing too base to live with in its walls.

When such a vision came to Gerald Tenby he shivered, and it was some time before he drifted back to his customary self-control. Then when he had put his fears completely behind him he would laugh at himself.

"If this had been going to happen," he would say to himself, confidently, "it would have happened long ago. Why am I such a fool? Hubert is a dead man as far as I am concerned, and my future is safe."

When she found herself alone in her room the night of her arrival in London, Antonio Marchmont knelt by the open window and looked across the tops of the houses to the clear sky studded with stars. She had a strange sensation upon her as she knelt there. It seemed to her as if she had drawn a little nearer to the one she sought; as if, having made the effort and turned herself away from the tranquillity and sorrow of her home, she had advanced a distinct step on the road toward the fulfillment of that task which was the one motive of her life.

"Where are you, Hubert?" the girl whispered to herself. "Oh! if my eyes could only pierce through the world and see you now! If only I could let you know that there is one creature who believes in you, and loves you, and will never rest till you are restored to your own, perhaps that would give you happiness, even though you have lost your father's trust and love, and though your enemy has triumphed over you! Shall I ever see you again, Hubert? Shall I ever see you again?"

She dropped her face into her hands, and knelt in that position for some time; then slowly she drew herself away from the window, closed the blind, and prepared to go to rest.

CHAPTER III.

Ben Coop had never married. He might have taken a wife many times, but he had a strong prejudice against asking any woman to share his life in so wild a spot as that in which he lived; and perhaps if he had told the truth, his honest heart was true to an old romance that had been one of the reasons for his leaving the little Lancashire village and setting forth to make a fortune for himself.

The spring had advanced a few weeks after that day of wild excitement at the station, and Ben was almost beginning to think that, if he wanted to see that fellow countryman of his again, he would have to take a trip to the big city and go to the prison gates. Everything had worked out as he had imagined. A whole army of police agents had come down in search of the fugitives; but, with the exception of one of the convicts, the search had been in vain. From these men Ben had tried to find out something about the other man who had gone back with the warders, but he could obtain no information. The more he thought about that episode the more he longed to come in contact again with one who had declared himself to be a Tenby.

"Ay, but it would give me rare joy to feel that I could do something for a Tenby," he said to himself. But the days had gone by, and Ben knew absolutely nothing about the young man who lived so constantly in his thoughts.

One night, however, as he stood at his gate, conscious that he had some eight or ten hours' rest before him, Ben's quick ear caught the sound of some one walking over the rough path. The place was lonely. For days at a time no one passed his way.

"Some poor tramp," he said to himself. "Well, he's welcome to a share of all I've got."

There was no moon, but the night was clear, and as the form of this stranger drew closer Ben's heart gave a great leap. He struck one brawny hand into the palm of the other.

"It's him!" he said to himself. "I'd swear to it."

And, acting on a sudden impulse, he strode over the rough ground to meet one whom he already called his guest, and Hubert Tenby's heart took a throb of new life as he saw that honest fellow standing before him with outstretched hands of welcome.

"I've been looking for you," Ben said. "I thought you would come, lad. I thought as they'd never keep you shut up after what you did that day! But you're fair done. You walk lame; lean on me. When you've had food you shall tell me all."

The other man covered his face with his hands for an instant. When he looked up there were tears in his eyes and an expression of deep suffering in them also. "Ah, friend," he said, unsteadily, "your words strike into my heart. There was not one of my blood to speak like this when my trouble came."

Ben Coop said nothing for a moment. He sat and looked at the man before him with an expression of deepest sympathy, affection, and yet of doubt mingled on his browed face. They strolled to and fro for a few moments in silence; then Hubert Tenby spoke:

"How long ago is it, Ben, since you came away from the old village?"

"Ay, but it's a long time. Going on for twenty-six years. I was just twenty, earning a fine wage, too, sir, in the mines."

"What made you think of coming out to this part?"

"I just drifted," Ben answered. "When I left the village I did not care much, sir, which way my feet went. I loved the old place. Just a few months before, if any one had asked me, 'Ben, lad, come away and make a fortune, I would have laughed in his face. See how life changes, sir. That was when I saw my future, as I thought, in the little village before I lost the girl I loved.'"

Hubert Tenby stretched out his hand and rested it for a moment on the shoulder of the other man.

"Death is sad," he said, slowly, "and yet it is not always the saddest thing, Ben."

"Ay, you're right there, sir, for it were no death that robbed me of my joy. It was such a simple story, I suppose, yet it weren't very simple to me. I had built the whole of my life's dream on my love for my lass. We had grown up together, she was the bonniest little soul man's eyes could see. Fool that I was, Ben said, bitterly, "I never dreamed that other would look upon her as I looked, or that she would find it easy to turn from my love. Anyhow, sir, that's the story of why I left the old place and came out here."

Hubert Tenby said nothing, only his hand rested a little more closely on Ben's shoulder.

"I was a little lad then, just between seven and eight, happy as the day was long, playing about in that old garden; and I had many a friend, too, in the village, and child as I was, I had paid more than one visit down to the bottom of the mine where you worked in the old days. Life is full of changes, indeed! Who would have ever imagined that I should have come to what I am?"

"I don't listen to what the world says, sir," Ben answered. "Tell me yourself, just what happened. Put it in your own words, and I will believe you—for, as I told you the first day I met you, I know you to be an honest man."

"It is an ugly story," Hubert Tenby said, his voice growing hoarse. "I am not going to deny that I did run a bit wild at Oxford—it is rather hard, you know, Ben, not to do as others do—and then I was launched upon the reputation of being my father's son—that is to say, a man with unlimited money at his disposal, and that is a bad thing to start on. I had plenty, but I had not as much as the others imagined, and what I had soon took wings to itself."

The young man paused and sighed. "How the money went I don't know, but go it certainly did; and then came disagreements—for I was ashamed to ask my father to pay heavy bills when he made me such a fine allowance. My cousin in Oxford, who happened to be working in Oxford as a private tutor at the time I was there, used to tell me I was a fool. 'What is the use,' he would say to me, 'of having a father who is simply rolling in money, and worrying your brain as you do about finding a miserable few hundreds? I wish now, Ben, I had let his advice urge me to go to my father.'"

"He must be older than you, sir, by a considerable few years, this Mr. Gerald Tenby," said Ben. "I mind him perfectly. He used to come to Mill Cross Court and stay there. He was not liked in the village," Ben said, dejectedly. "The folk said he had a tight hand and a cunning eye. He took that from his father. Many a time I have heard the old people in the village marvel at the difference there was between the head branch of the family and the other side. Of course, the money was with your father; but no money could ever have put your father's nature into his cousin Robert. Of course, you remember him, sir?"

"No, not at all. The fact is that there was a kind of quarrel between my father and Gerald's father; and yet when Gerald lost his father, no one was kinder to him than mine. The old house was open to him to come to whenever he liked; my father did everything in his power to give him a start in life. There was no money for Gerald to claim; but Sir Maurice never let him realize how poor he was. He staid him in nothing, and Gerald always professed to love my father very deeply."

"Mayhap I wrong him," Ben Coop said, slowly; "but if he's his father's son there cannot be much that is good in his heart. I speak very frankly, you see, sir; but I remember lots of little things done to the village people by Mr. Robert Tenby, and I know what I am saying. They were not the real family, you see; that's why we found it hard to trust them. But I am interrupting you, sir."

"I don't feel eager to go on," Hubert Tenby said, "and yet I feel that I must. Instead of taking my cousin's advice I struggled on as best I could, and here Gerald helped me to meet my difficulties. He arranged a loan. I dare say you understand what followed."

"Ay," Ben Coop answered, quietly; "I am not a learned man, but I know what borrowing means."

"I'm a man who scrape along," Hubert said, "and pay the interest as it fell due; but I did not realize till nearly a year had gone that, instead of clearing the way for myself, I had only put fresh stumbling blocks in my path. Gerald was always coming to ask me either to settle the loan or to pay a heavier interest, and things got worse and worse, until I came to a kind of crisis and I had to find a sum four times the amount of what I had originally owed in a space of a few days. It was useless to ask Gerald to show me a way out of this difficulty, for he told me plainly he saw none except that of putting the matter before my father and asking him to pay the debt. I would not hear what he urged. I made myself almost ill with worry. I felt like a madman. Just at this time my old aunt and godmother, Lady Charlotte Singleton, wrote and asked me to go and stay with her for a few days. She had a charming country house not far from Oxford, and I was in the habit of going to see her constantly. In fact, she was kind to both Gerald and myself, although I believe that she, like my father, had had good reason to quarrel with Gerald's father. It was an open secret that Lady Charlotte intended to divide what she possessed between my sister and myself."

Hubert paused here with a little sigh; then he went on with his story. "She was not rich, but she had a certain amount of property, and, among other things, she possessed a collection of beautiful jewels, of which she was very proud, and which were valued at a fairly large sum of money. I was sorely tempted to tell the dear old lady all that was troubling me while I was with her; and here again I see the working of a malignant fate, for if I had spoken then, Ben, I might have spared myself all that followed. Pride, however, and the nervous fear lest she should imagine I wanted her to help me, kept my lips sealed. When I got back to Oxford the first question Gerald asked me was if Lady Charlotte would be able to help me. I replied sharply that I had said nothing to my godmother of the matter. He looked at me in a strange way for a little while, and then turned on his heel and left me, saying as he went, 'You are about the biggest fool I have ever known, and you will realize it one day.' I was very angry with him."

They had ceased strolling up and down the little garden, and now they were sitting in the porch of the little cottage, and the light of the lamp within shone on his face. It was a sorrowful face for such a young man to wear, and Ben Coop's heart contracted as he looked upon it. "Next day Gerald and I did not meet. I heard that he had gone away. I knew that he had been offered the post of traveling tutor to an invalid boy, and that this was something he was very keen to do. Generous as my father was to him, it was an old story for me to hear how hard life was for my cousin, and how much there was he wanted to do; and he had been particularly keen on taking this appointment, because it would give him the opportunity of traveling and seeing the world. I don't know that I was sorry that we did not meet—at any rate, not then. A little later it was a different matter."

There was another pause. When Hubert spoke again his voice was very hurried and strained.

FOREST MONARCHS.

Washington Fir Trees Which Reach a Height of Over 300 Feet.

The big trees of the United States are not all in the show groves of California by any means, although many people have the idea that the sequoias are the giants of American forests. It is true that they are the largest in circumference, but many of the red firs around Puget Sound grow to as great height, for specimens have been felled which measured 325 feet from the point where they were cut to the topmost branch. They were really eight or ten feet longer, because measured only along the fallen trunk.

Such is the size of the red firs in some parts of the State of Washington that timbers for bridges 150 feet in length have been saved from a single trunk, while ship spars over 100 feet long are frequently taken from them. They are far more graceful and symmetrical than the sequoias, for the reason that, being smaller around at the bottom, they taper upward more gradually.

The sequoias, such as is seen in the Big Tree grove in Mariposa county, Cal., bulge out for 75 to 100 feet from the ground up, which gives it a bulky and ungainly appearance compared with the fir. But this bulge is so large that some of the trees have holes cut through them in the form of arches big enough to allow a two-horse team to be driven through.

When a fir is 15 feet in diameter at the butt it makes a pretty big tree. On some of the islands of Puget Sound, as well as in the country north of Seattle, trees of this size have been found among the smaller ones.

The timbermen consider the felling of a tree of this sort something to brag about, especially when the trunk is as large that seven or eight men can sit side by side in the cut made by the axes without crowding.

The Worst Over.

An old lady from the far north of England was traveling by the North British Railway, justly famous formerly, says the author of "Reminiscences of Manchester" (England), for taking the longest possible time for making the shortest possible distance.

There was a man traveling with her in the carriage, and when at last they approached some terminus where they were to change to another line, he thawed sufficiently to ask the old lady where she was going.

"Gangin'! Well, I'm gangin' awa to China," she replied, "but, eh, mon, I'm mair na thankful that I've gait the wairst o' the journey a'er."

Couldn't Help It.

"Have you tried that new oil for your backache?"

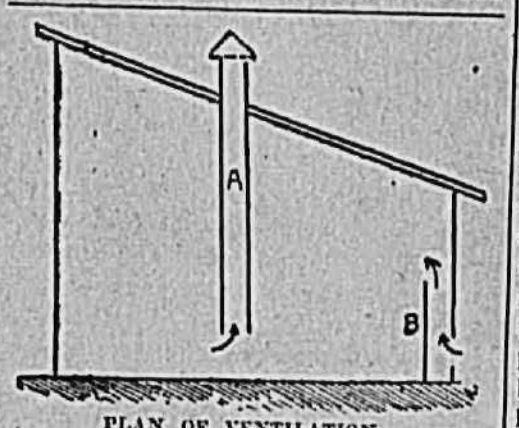

"No, I'll stick to my porous plaster for a while."—Cleveland Leader.

FARMS AND FARMERS

Ventilation of Farm Buildings.

There are no small buildings on the farm that cannot be amply ventilated by the simple plan here described. Generally such buildings are of the single or sloping-roof sort so that the plan can be carried out at small expense. In the rear of the house, near one corner, build an air shaft, made by joining at the edges four boards about eight inches wide. Set this into the ground or fasten to the floor if of boards so that it will be firm. Have it open at the top, of course, and make it three or four feet high. In the side of it, next to the wall of the building and about a foot up from the floor cut out a piece so as to have an opening the width of the board and about six inches the other way, and in the side of the building opposite this hole in the shaft cut a hole of corresponding size. Cover those two holes as well as the hole in the top of the shaft with wire netting so that no bird or small animal can get in.

This is the shaft by which the air enters the building. Then build another shaft long enough to reach the floor up through the roof so that it will come out through the roof a foot or fifteen inches. The top of this shaft must be capped so that the opening will be protected from rain. The lower end is to be covered with wire netting. Fasten this firmly at the roof end and with corner supports to the floor at the bottom. The plan is simple, easy to construct and works splendidly. It is particularly good for ventilating poultry houses. In the plain illustration A represents the shaft through which the foul air passes and B the shaft through which the fresh air enters.

A Barrel Cucumber Garden.

An interesting form of backyard gardening is raising cucumbers in barrels. An old sugar barrel without heads will answer. Get several of them and saw them in two, setting the halves according to the space available, about twelve feet apart. Drive a stake through the center of the barrel to hold firm during storms and fill the barrel with manure. Plant four hills of cucumbers around the inside of each barrel and make a kind of trellis in the shape of the letter H out of laths, one trellis for each hill, one end to rest on the top of the barrel. The vines may be readily made to run over the barrels and trellis, making a very attractive and luxuriant appearance, and producing immense quantities of cucumbers. The crop will be greatly increased if the vines are thoroughly soaked during the dry weather.

Combined Roller and Marker.

A neat attachment to a garden roller is the following: Bore holes eight inches apart lengthwise and put in pins. To mark the garden make those pins each hold a small rope, encircling the roller by driving them into the holes beside the ends of the rope. More than one row of holes can be used to change distances. Tack strips lengthwise of the roller to mark places in row for setting plants.

Seed Testing.

The bureau of plant industry is doing a good deal of seed testing this spring owing to the reports published in regard to widespread adulteration. Special attention is given to testing samples of alfalfa seed for fodder. Many other seeds come in for careful examination as to purity but testing for germination does not receive so much attention. This is a branch of seed testing that can be better attended to by the farmer himself and it is something that every farmer should be intensely interested in.

Gang Plowing.

Recent improvement in traction engines and gang plows is making a great difference in the manner of breaking the soil on the larger level farms of the west. Some of the newer arrangements do the plowing and harrowing at one operation. Under certain conditions of soil and season a drill is hitched behind the harrow and a bare field in the morning is seeded to grain crop at night. Those of us who have carefully prepared a large acreage

THREE FACTS

For Sick Women To Consider

First.—That almost every operation in our hospitals performed upon women becomes necessary through neglect of such symptoms as backache, irregular and painful periods, displacements of the female organs, pain in the side, burning sensation in the stomach, bearing-down pain, nervousness, dizziness and sleeplessness.

Second.—The medicine that holds the record for the largest number of absolute cures of female ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It regulates, strengthens and cures diseases of the female organism as nothing else can.

For thirty years it has been helping women to be strong, curing backache, nervousness, kidney troubles, inflammation of the female organs, weakness and displacements, regulating the periods perfectly and overcoming their pains. It has also proved itself invaluable in preparing women for childbirth and the change of life.

Third.—The great volume of unsolicited and grateful testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., many of which are from time to time published by permission, give absolute evidence of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women.—Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. From symptoms given, your trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Mrs. Pinkham is daughter-in-law of Lydia E. Pinkham and for twenty-five years under her direction and since her decease she has been advising sick women free of charge. Out of the vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Surely, any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.

In Good Company.

"Madam," said the brakeman, "you'll have to put that dog in the baggage car. It's against the rules to bring him in here."

"This is an educated dog, sir. He knows more than you do."

"That alters the case, ma'am," rejoined the brakeman, picking up the animal. "He'll travel first class in the special car up in front, that's occupied by an educated horse, but you'll have to pay extra."

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by that continually failed to cure with local treatment. It is now known to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. It cures catarrh of any form and is guaranteed to cure. Courtesy of the Plains.

Cowboys have long vacations from polite society. Their intercommunications are not with practiced courtesy. When accident throws them into the presence of ladies, the strain upon them to make favorable and lasting impression seldom lacks in intensity.

A train on the Southern Pacific road was delayed at a station. Two ladies, attracted by a display of game in a restaurant window, entered to pass the time while enjoying a meal of it.

There was but one table. At it two cowboys were testing their own capacity and that of the ladies. They rose, bowed, jingled their spurs, stroked their mustaches, and stood until the ladies were seated. "That they had so far conducted themselves with success was evident in their manner."

To be equally courteous, one of the ladies sought opportunity to return their politeness.

"Will you not have some of the butter?" she asked one of them.

The reply was instantaneous—"I don't choose none, thank you most to death, ma'am."

TRANSFORMATIONS.

Curious Results When Coffee Drinking Is Abandoned.

It is almost as hard for an old coffee toper to quit the use of coffee as it is for a whiskey or tobacco fiend to break off, except that the coffee user can quit coffee and take up Postum Food Coffee without any feeling of a loss of the morning beverage, for when Postum is well boiled and served with cream, it is really better in point of flavor than most of the coffee served nowadays, and to the taste of the connoisseur it is like the flavor of fine Java.

A great transformation takes place in the body within ten days or two weeks after coffee is left off and Postum Food Coffee used, for the reason that the poison to the nerves has been discontinued and in its place is taken a liquid that contains the most powerful elements of nourishment.

It is easy to make this test and prove these statements by changing from coffee to Postum Food Coffee. "There's a reason."

PRIDE OF VERMONT

BENNINGTON AND ITS TWO FINE MONUMENTS.

Where Gen. Stark and His Brave Revolutionary Soldiers Repulsed Col. Baum's Force of Marauding Hessians.

Bennington is the most peculiarly interesting of all Vermont towns, on account of its historical association as well as its pictorial beauty, says a writer in the Four Track News. It is situated in the extreme southwestern portion of the beautiful state whose name, derived from two words signifies "green" and "mountain." It was here that the pride-sweller

BATTLE MONUMENT.

Burgoyne cast a covetous eye on the supplies and stores gathered from the fertile fields, and to secure which for his hungry mercenaries he sent out an army early in August, 1777 under Col. Baum, composed chiefly of Germans with a scattering of British.

Walking up the steep mile incline to Bennington Center, you can see the site of the Catamount tavern, headquarters for the "Council of Safety," which constituted the organized government of Vermont (now marked by a powerful statue) where Gen. John Stark sulked over his disappointment at not receiving the deserved brigadiership in the continental army from which he, in wrath, resigned his colonelcy to assume command of the New Hampshire militia. Though a breach of discipline, it was lucky for the Americans that Gen. Stark had not conformed to Lincoln's orders to join the main army against Burgoyne for he was, through this fortuitous chance, on the very spot where he was needed to repulse the detachment under Col. Baum, and it was in this very tavern named, so tradition has it, from the darling animals who prowled fearlessly in its vicinity and

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

PIRACY OF 20TH CENTURY.

Art Treasures Rescued from the Sea by Divers Stolen by Grecian Rovers.

A picturesque bit of twentieth-century piracy is reported from the isles of Greece. Antiquaries believe that they have fixed the position off Antioch, the modern Corinto, of the ships laden with art treasures and plunder that Mummilus dispatched to Rome after the capture of Corinth, over 2,000 years ago, and which are recorded as having sunk in a storm in that neighborhood. Within three or four years the sea has yielded up objects of great artistic and archaeological worth to the divers that the Greek government employs on the coast, notably the marvelous bronze apaches now in the Athens museum.

Very recently the divers were attacked by pirates and robbed of their latest hauls from the sea. The intrinsic value of the bronzes and marbles they may have brought up is slight, but the pirates must have some idea of the prices collectors will give for them. The Greek government has sent a gunboat in search of the thieves. If it captures them it may find out whether they are mere freebooters or the instruments of unscrupulous art collectors.

Most of our song birds have three notes expressive of love, alarm and fellowship, says John Burroughs, in Country Life in America. The latter call seems to keep them in touch with one another. I might perhaps add to this list the scream of distress which most birds utter when caught by a cat or a hawk—the voice of uncontrolled terror and pain which is nearly the same in all species—dissonant and piercing. The other notes and calls are characteristic, but this last is the simple speech of common terrified nature.

Two barbers were disengaged when the customer came in, says the New York Press. Both got their chairs ready, but the newcomer dodged them. "I need a shave, all right," he said, to the proprietor, "but I want to shave myself. Can you accommodate me here?"

"Certainly," said the proprietor, "but I'll charge you the same as if one of my men shaved you."
"That's all right," said the man. "I'm not kicking about the price. All I want is a chance to do my own barbering."

A tonsorial outfit was speedily produced and the self-sufficient individual set to work.

"Isn't that a new wrinkle?" asked another man who had been an interested observer of the proceedings.

"Not at all," returned the proprietor. "Every once in a while we run up against a fellow who prefers to shave himself, but hasn't the apparatus at hand. We keep a lot of extra razors in stock for the accommodation of just such independent customers."

Record Shot.

Frank Ward, of New South Wales, is believed to have killed more rabbits at one shot than any other man living. His record is 27. The little animals were drinking at a tank and presented every opportunity for a big kill.

THERE WAS A "MIGGS UP."

How the German Foreman of a Village Fire Company Settled the Matter.

The village fire company was holding a meeting to make preliminary arrangements for the "annual banquet," and there was a marked difference of opinion as to the articles of food that ought to grace the festive board on that important occasion. After prolonged argument a vote was taken and it was found that the company was evenly divided on the question. Half the members were in favor of sandwiches, cake and coffee and the other half wanted a regular chicken supper. The foreman of the company, who was presiding at the deliberations, was a German, and he was somewhat unfamiliar with parliamentary procedure. This problem of a tie vote filled him with perplexity and he struggled with speech in vain endeavor to emerge gracefully from the dilemma. Finally a member of the company came to his aid and told him that it was his privilege as the presiding officer to decide a tie by voting himself. His countenance lighted up with a relief. "Die is a miggs-up," he said. "Hoff of der members wishes sangvitchies unt goffee unt der under hoff makes der votes for a chicken supper. Dot makes a tie vote, unt I settle der kvestion by votting for a clem chowder. Der dinner will be a chowder, unt der secretory will make a unanimousness to der vote by puddig it in der book."

Learning Monkey Language.

A chair for the study of monkey language is to be established in Chicago university. Three dozen monkeys from Central Africa are now on their way to Chicago, there to become the prey of professors, to be forced by kindness to deliver up their conversation. By degrees, it is hoped, the rudiments of monkey talk will be reduced to writing.

Confusing to Travelers.

Cities where time is arbitrarily changed, as from central to mountain, are sometimes full of confused travelers. Dodge City, Kan., is one such. People are especially bothered there about the time of arrival and departure of trains. Some one the other day asked a railway officer when a certain train started. The answer was "in about six minutes." "Well, say," was the question, "is that central or west time?"

A good complexion is impossible with the stomach out of order. If pasty sallow people would pay more attention to their stomachs and less to the skin on their faces they would have better complexions. Kodol for Dyspepsia will digest what you eat and put your stomach back in right shape to do its own work. Kodol relieves palpitation of the heart, flatulence, sour stomach, heartburn, etc. Sold by J. H. Swan.

VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT.

Much Accomplished by Societies Since Their Founding in the Year 1853.

In 1853 a woman in Stockbridge, Mass., founded the first village improvement society in America. Stockbridge was only a shabby little town then, with a muddy road through it, a cemetery full of weeds, and a bare common, unshaded and trodden. In a single year the place was transformed. Four hundred trees were planted, the road rebuilt, the village made clean and attractive.

The history of the place is not unique. Wonders, miracles even, have been wrought in out-of-the-way spots. In one of the most hopeless in Georgia, a society was formed which began by planting a double row of trees along its central roadway. This is now a handsome boulevard.

The street is curbed with granite, grass has been made to grow and shrubs have been set out everywhere. Rural parks, churches draped with vines, and house yards vying with one another in beauty all make the place an Eden. With this town as an object lesson no one need despair of even the most forlorn little village.

Proper Definition.

The old man came into the parlor just in time to catch the young man kissing his daughter.

"Sir," said the stern parent, "what do you mean by that kind of business?"

"Pardon me," rejoined the young man, calmly, "but it isn't business at all; it's the pleasantest kind of pleasure."—Chicago Daily News.

MADE THE PERFECT PEARL

Process Discovered by French Chemist Produces a Faultless Specimen.

A French chemist, M. Tecla by name, has recently succeeded after 11 years of research in discovering a process to scientifically produce a pearl that would equal the product of nature. The fact that rubies and pearls have been scientifically produced has stimulated manufacturers of these precious stones to seek a duplicate of the pearl, the popularity of which has been growing steadily in public demand.

To this end perfect specimens of the pearl have been continuously sought after, and in many cases fabulous amounts are frequently paid for a faultless stone. It is said that through a secret known only to himself M. Tecla has succeeded in attaining his ambition to produce what is apparently a genuine pearl at one-sixth the cost of the orient specimen, a calcareous concretion, indestructible and of the adamant quality and exact weight of the real stone, with skin of fine and delicate texture and of a clear, almost translucent color, with the subdued iridescent sheen so dear to judges of these very fascinating gems. M. Tecla has only recently finished the experimental stage and it will be quite some time before his results will be brought before the public.

Crafty Count.

"Do you remember how Count Cashnaught sympathized with America when he was wooing the daughter of the New York millionaire?"

"I should say so. Why, he used to sing 'Yankee Doodle' two or three times every day."

"And does he still sing 'Yankee Doodle' now that he has won her?"

"No, now he sings 'Yankee Boogie'."
